Your Compatibility Reading · Emma & Liam

A letter from Wolin

Dear Emma and Liam,

When I look at your two charts side by side, I see a full moon rising over a great reservoir. Emma is the moon: bright, composed, a little proud of her own light. Liam is the deep water held behind a strong dam: steady, patient, carrying more than he shows. Moonlight falling on still water is a lovely picture, and it fits you well.

At the heart of your bond is a quiet kind of nourishment. In Saju, Emma's element, Metal, feeds Liam's element, Water. Her clarity and steadiness can help his inner world move and breathe. In turn, both of you are looking for the same medicine, Water and Metal, so you understand each other's thirst in a way many pairs do not.

One thing worth reflecting on together is the rhythm of ordinary days. The places in your charts that describe home and daily life pull in different directions, which can show up as small friction over routines, space and timing. You might ask each other, gently and often: "What does a good, ordinary evening look like for you?"

With warmth,
Wolin

You two at a glance

Emma's energy feeds Liam's: a theme of giving and receiving.

Give & take 61

Emma carries 24% of what Liam needs; Liam carries 11% of what Emma needs.

Your Day Branches clash: different rhythms that invite clear personal space.

Ease 64

Some points of friction worth talking through.

Your overall harmony figure is 59, which the charts call "Learning each other." This number is a harmony index from 0 to 100. It measures how closely the elements in your two charts meet each other's needs. It describes the energy between you as it stands. It does not describe where your relationship goes, and it is not a grade. A figure in the middle range simply means some parts of your bond flow easily, and others ask for attention and patience.

Spark sits at 68, the highest of your four figures. This reflects natural attraction: Emma's Metal feeds Liam's Water. It is a gentle, supportive pull, the kind where one person's presence helps the other feel more like themselves.

Everyday life sits at 46, the most tender spot. The parts of your charts that speak about home, body and partnership face each other in a clash. Picture two people who both care deeply but prefer different rhythms. One wants plans settled, while the other wants to keep things open. Or one recharges by talking, the other by quiet. None of this is a flaw. It is texture that rewards clear, kind conversation.

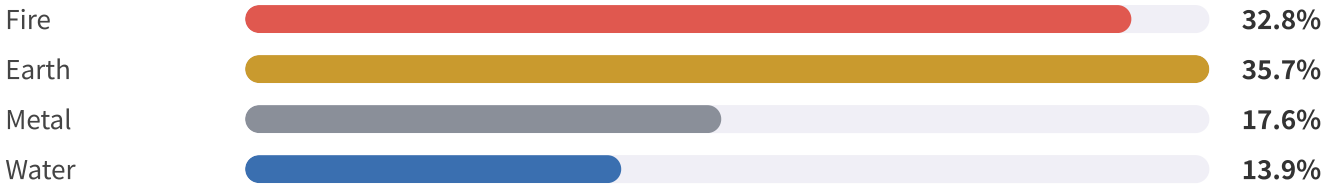

What you give each other is 61. You both need the same elements, Water and Metal. Emma carries about 24 percent of what Liam needs, while Liam carries about 11 percent of what Emma needs. So the giving here leans a little toward Emma, and noticing this openly can help keep things fair.

Ease together is 64. Underneath the friction, there is a real comfort in simply being near each other.

What this means for you

Emma, your Day Master is Geng Metal (庚), the element of raw iron, blades and strong frames. Your Day Pillar, Geng Chen (庚辰), is described as "the full moon meeting the dragon." People with this pattern often carry a quiet ambition and a sharp, polished presence. Others may read you as cool or reserved at first. Those who know you well find a warm heart and a deep sense of loyalty. You hold yourself to a standard of dignity, and you rarely let a friend down.

Your chart is strong, meaning you have plenty of inner support and self-reliance. Alongside that strength, your chart holds a good deal of Fire, which in your chart stands for pressure, rules and responsibility. Picture someone who handles a demanding job well but carries the weight home in her shoulders. There is also a lot of Earth, which feeds your Metal even further. Too much feeding can feel like overthinking, or like being too heavy with your own plans.

What you need most is Water, which in your chart means expression: speaking, creating, writing, sharing what you think. Born in early summer, you also need Water's coolness to balance the heat around you. Steady Metal helps you too, in the form of trusted peers and a sense of your own ground. When you talk things through, make something with your hands, or put a finished piece of work out into the world, your energy flows instead of building up.

In love, you are loyal, protective and quietly devoted. You may show care by solving problems or keeping your word, rather than with soft words. Your chart places a supportive energy in the partner seat, so a partner who backs you up, listens and gives you room to think matters a great deal to you. You also benefit from someone who invites you to open up and helps the conversation flow. Your pride can be a strength. When it hardens, though, it can create distance. You might reflect on moments when softening your tone could let your warmth show through.

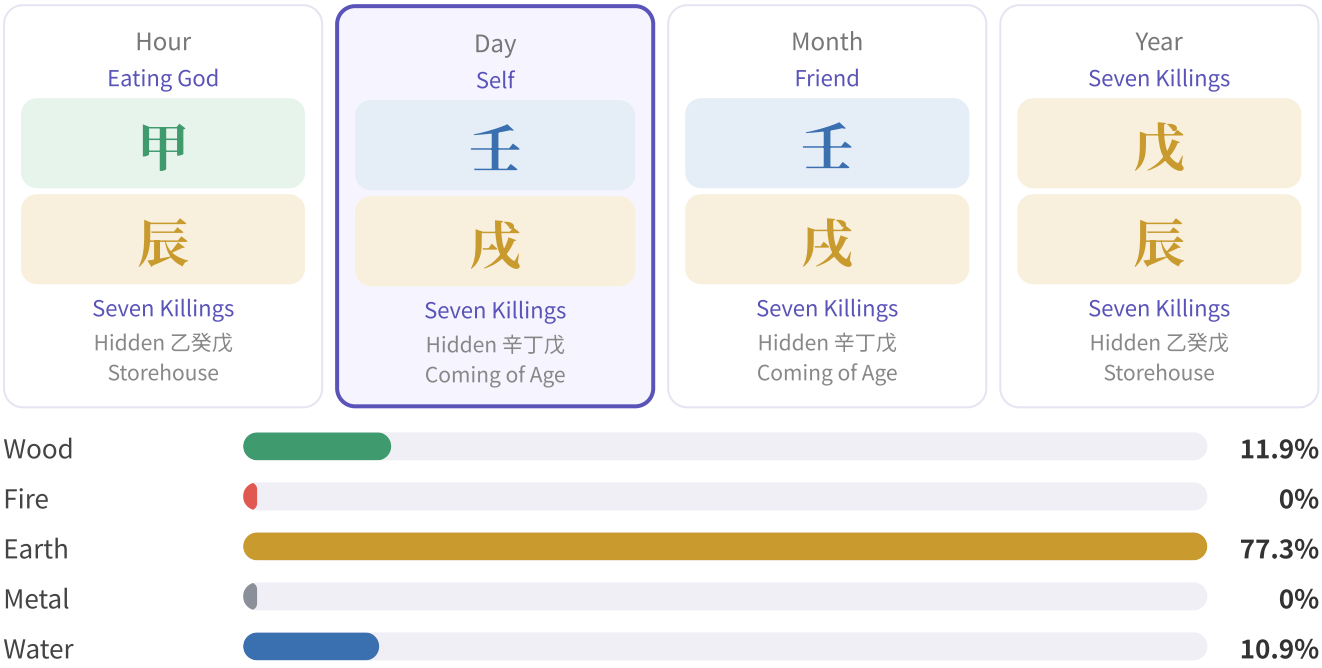

A small idea to try: after a long day, instead of sorting everything out in your head alone, say one honest sentence out loud about how the day felt. That is your Water at work.

The Saju reasoning

Your Geng Metal sits on Chen Earth, an Indirect Resource that supports you. With the Kui Gang Star adding intensity, your strength index reaches 53, a strong chart facing a sizable Power group of Fire (32.8%). Your Useful God is Water, the Output that releases your energy and cools a chart born in the Si month of early summer. Metal is your Helpful God, while Earth and Fire are the elements you already have in excess.

Liam in plain words

What this means for you

Liam, your Day Master is Ren Water (壬), the element of great rivers, lakes and the open sea. Your Day Pillar, Ren Xu (壬戌), is described as "great water held in a dam." It is a picture of someone who gathers strength quietly, carries responsibility without complaint, and manages people and situations with real steadiness. People with this pattern are often the ones others lean on at work and at home. They endure pressure that would wear others down.

The other side of that picture is that your chart is gentle, meaning you have relatively little inner support. Around your Water sits a great deal of Earth, about 77 percent of your chart's energy. In your chart, Earth stands for pressure, duty and expectation. Imagine a reservoir with high walls on every side. The water is deep and calm, but it has few places to flow. You may find yourself holding things in, saying "I'm fine" when you are tired, or carrying worry in your body. Several parts of your chart also pull against one another, which can feel like a restless push and pull inside, even when you look composed.

What you need most is Water, meaning companions: friends, allies and people who stand beside you so you are not carrying everything alone. Metal helps you too, and in your chart Metal means learning, mentors, qualifications and expertise. Building knowledge and skill is one of the clearest ways for you to turn pressure into real strength. Metal is hidden inside your chart rather than shown on the surface, so it may take conscious effort to bring it forward.

In love, you show care through reliability: showing up, fixing things, keeping promises. Words can be harder. Your chart hints at a deep bond in the partner seat. It also gently suggests that saying what you feel, often and plainly, matters more than you might think. A partner who supports you steadily, encourages your growth and gives you room to open the floodgates in your own time can mean a great deal to you.

A small idea to try: once a week, name one thing that weighed on you and one thing you appreciated about your partner. Letting a little water through the dam regularly is gentler than waiting until it overflows.

The Saju reasoning

Your Ren Water sits on Xu Earth, a Seven Killings (pressure) energy. With Earth dominating the chart and inner support at an index of only 11, your chart is gentle, and the Chen and Xu branches clash several times within it. Your Useful God is Water, the Companion that strengthens you, and your Helpful God is Metal, the Resource of learning hidden inside Xu. Earth and Fire are the elements you already carry in abundance.

Spark and attraction

What this means for you

Emma, your Day Master is Geng Metal (庚): raw ore, a blade before it is polished. It is clear, direct and steady under pressure. Liam, your Day Master is Ren Water (壬): a wide river or open sea. It is deep, patient and able to carry a great deal. In the five elements, Metal feeds Water. That is the heart of the spark between you two, and it sits at a warm 68.

In daily life this often looks like Emma being the source and Liam being the one who takes that clarity and turns it into movement. Picture Liam coming home with a knot in his head from work. Emma asks three sharp questions, lays the problem out on the kitchen table, and suddenly he can see a path. He feels steadier, not because she solved it for him, but because her clarity gave his water something firm to gather around.

The pull runs the other way too, in a different flavor. In Emma's chart, Liam's Water appears as the Eating God, the part of life linked with easy self-expression, pleasure, good food and letting ideas flow out. Water is also exactly the element Emma's chart treats as its medicine. So being around Liam can feel like loosening a collar: you talk more freely, laugh more easily, and your ambitions find an outlet instead of staying pressed inside.

In Liam's chart, Emma appears as Indirect Resource, the energy of support, protection and unusual kinds of learning. Liam, your chart shows no Metal and no Resource on its surface, so Emma brings something that is otherwise quiet in you. People with this pattern often describe the other person as the one who "makes things make sense," or the one who believes in them before they believe in themselves.

One theme worth reflecting on is balance in the giving. Metal feeding Water is a lovely current, but a source can tire if it only pours. Emma, you might notice whether you slip into being the advisor every time. Liam, you might notice the moments when you can feed Emma back, through humor, ease and the relaxed space your Water opens up for her. The spark stays bright when both of you can feel it moving.

The Saju reasoning

Metal generates Water, so Emma's Day Master nourishes Liam's. In the Ten Gods, Liam's Ren Water is Emma's Eating God, her channel of expression, while Emma's Geng Metal is Liam's Indirect Resource, his source of support. Both are favorable elements for the person receiving them.

Everyday life together

What this means for you

Your Day Branches, the part of the chart tied to body, home life and partnership, are the Dragon (辰) for Emma and the Dog (戌) for Liam. These two face each other from opposite sides of the circle and form a clash. That is why everyday life sits at 46, the most tender area between you two. Tender does not mean wrong. It means this is where you will learn the most about each other.

Both branches are Earth, but they are very different kinds of Earth. Emma's Dragon holds a trace of Water hidden inside, so it is damp, fertile ground. Liam's Dog holds a trace of Fire, so it is dry, warm, guarded ground. In home terms, it is like two people who both care deeply about stability but picture it differently. One wants the shelves rearranged so things breathe. The other wants them left exactly where they have always been, because that sameness feels safe.

You might recognize scenes like these:

- A Sunday morning where one of you wants to tackle a project and the other needs to stay put and recover.

- Small disagreements about how the home should be set up, when chores happen, or how money and plans are kept track of, that turn out to be about feeling secure rather than about the task itself.
- A strange sense that friction wakes you both up. Clashes create movement, and a little push can get stale routines going again.

Liam, your own chart already carries several Dragon and Dog clashes inside it, so this push and pull may feel oddly familiar to you. You may be more used to living with tension than you realize, and also more tired by it than you let on. Emma, your own Day Pillar carries a note of care around words and agreements when this clash is active. In a shared home that might simply mean taking the extra minute to say what you mean before deciding something together.

Your Year Branches, the Horse (午) for Emma and the Dragon for Liam, sit side by side without strongly pulling or pushing. This is your inherited temperament, the values you absorbed growing up. Neutral ground here is useful. Your family backgrounds and old habits do not argue much, but they also do not automatically agree, so it helps to talk about them out loud. You might try asking each other how your families handled holidays, money or conflict. These are often the hidden rules behind your daily choices.

The Saju reasoning

The Dragon and the Dog are opposite Earth storehouses, one damp and holding Water, one dry and holding Fire, so they clash. That clash colors home life with both friction and movement. The Horse and Dragon Year Branches form no special combination or clash, so your inherited values meet on open ground.

What you give each other

What this means for you

Here is something unusual about you two. Your charts want the same medicine. For both Emma and Liam, the Useful God is Water and the Helpful God is Metal. For both, Earth and Fire are the heavier elements that weigh things down. Emma's chart is a strong one, full of Fire and Earth. Liam's chart is a gentle one, with Earth making up more than three quarters of its energy. You carry similar weights, so you understand each other's tiredness without much explanation.

Emma carries 24% of the elements Liam needs, mostly through her Metal and some Water. In daily life that can look like her being the one who brings structure, sharp thinking and a sense of "we can sort this." Liam, when the pressure in your life feels like a heavy dam, Emma's Metal can work like a channel that helps some of that weight move.

Think of her pushing you to finish a qualification, or helping you write the email you have been avoiding.

Liam carries 11% of the elements Emma needs, mainly his Water. It is a smaller share, but it lands in a meaningful place. Emma's chart has a lot of heat and density, and it asks specifically for Water to cool and balance it. Liam's calm, his willingness to let things be, and his ability to just sit with her can feel like a glass of cold water on a hot afternoon.

The figure for what you give each other is 61. That is a solid middle ground, and it suggests a simple, freeing idea. Neither of you can be the other's whole supply of what you need. Because you need the same things, you can seek them together rather than expecting the other to provide them. That might mean evenings by the water, quiet time with fewer obligations, learning something new as a pair, or less clutter at home.

You might also reflect on the imbalance in the numbers. Emma gives a little more of what Liam needs than she receives back. That is not a problem to fix, just something to notice. Liam, small gestures that help Emma express herself, rest and cool down can mean more than grand ones. Emma, letting yourself receive, rather than always supplying, is part of the flow too.

The Saju reasoning

Both charts share the same Useful God system: Water first, then Metal, with Earth and Fire as the heavier elements. Emma's chart holds 24% of Liam's favorable elements and Liam's holds 11% of Emma's, according to the match figures.

Where you differ, and how to meet

What this means for you

The first difference is pace and inner weather. Emma's chart is strong, so you tend to move forward, decide and push. Liam's chart is gentle, with heavy pressure from what Saju calls the Power group, the energy of duty, rules and responsibility. Liam, you may carry a lot silently and endure long past the point where you should have said something. Liam's own Day Pillar note warns that holding too much in can turn into strain inside, especially around digestion. Emma might be ready to act while Liam is still quietly absorbing the situation. This is a gap in tempo, not in caring.

The second difference is pride and firmness. Both of your Day Pillars carry the Kui Gang Star, a symbol of strong will, dignity and a refusal to be pushed around. Emma's Day Pillar note mentions that too much pride can create opponents. When two people with this star disagree, neither likes to blink first. A small disagreement about weekend plans can become a quiet standoff about who is right.

The third difference is the Dragon and Dog clash in your home life, which we met earlier. It shows up as different ideas of what feels secure and settled.

Some ways you might meet in the middle:

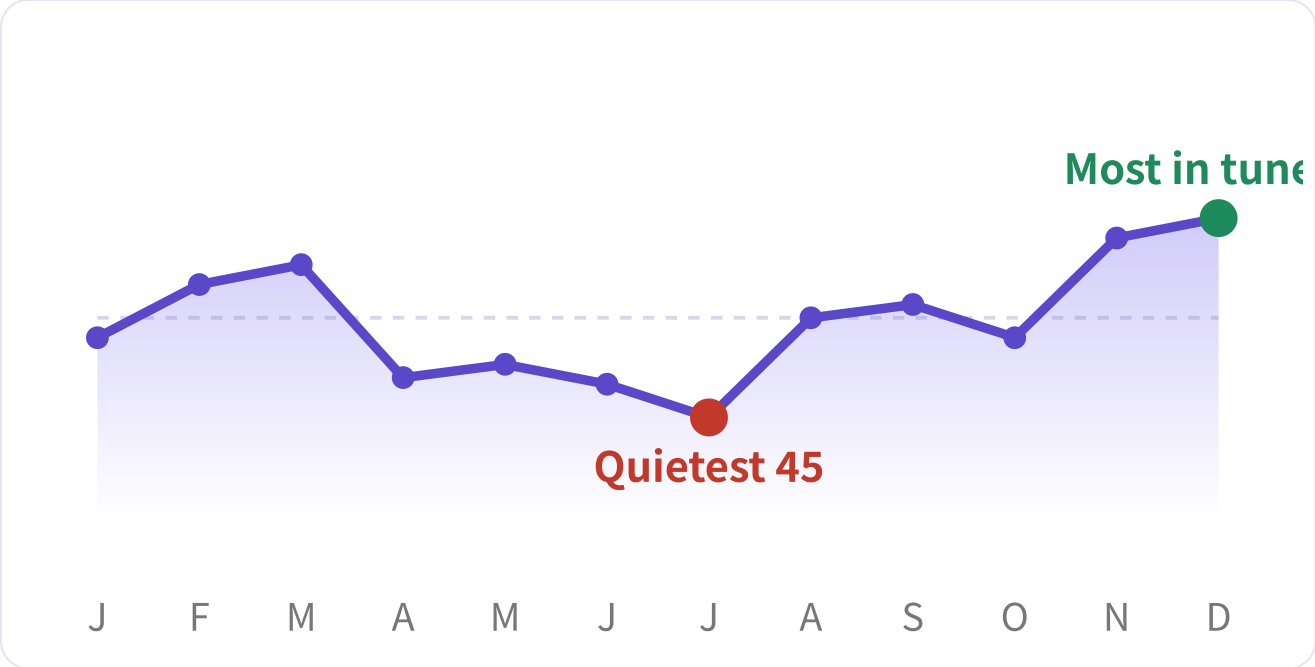

- Emma, try asking before solving. A simple "Do you want ideas, or do you want me to just listen?" can help a lot. Your clarity works best when it is invited.
- Liam, try saying things earlier and out loud, even if they are half formed. Your Day Pillar note gently suggests expressing yourself often. Emma usually prefers a messy honest sentence to a polished silence.
- For bigger shared decisions such as moves, money or travel, you might write the plan down together. It cools the Kui Gang firmness, because you are both looking at the same page rather than at each other.
- Agree on a pause word. When a disagreement turns into a standoff, either of you can call a twenty minute break, ideally with a walk outside or a glass of water.
- Give each other one corner of the home to arrange freely. The Dragon gets to rearrange, the Dog gets to keep, and both feel secure.
- Notice who has been giving more lately and rebalance on purpose. Small acts count.

People with these patterns often find that friction softens once it has a name. "That's our Dragon and Dog thing again" can turn tension into a shared joke.

The Saju reasoning

Emma's chart sits at a strength index of 53 (strong) and Liam's at 11 (gentle, with Power at 77.3%), which explains the difference in pace. Both Day Pillars carry the Kui Gang Star of firm will, and the Day Branches clash.

2027 for the two of you

What this means for you

The Year of the Fire Goat (丁未) brings Fire and Earth, the two elements both of your charts already carry heavily. So for each of you the year's harmony sits at 42. That points to a year of heavier weather, one that suits steady pacing over big leaps.

For Emma, the Goat echoes the Goat already in your hour pillar and links with your Horse, adding warmth and weight. Its Fire stem also pushes against the Water in your hour pillar, which is your channel of expression. It may be a year to reflect on how freely you let yourself speak, create and rest. Your current 10-year cycle, running from 2022 to 2031, carries a similar Fire and Earth tone, so gentleness with yourself is a theme worth holding.

For Liam, the year's Fire stem combines with your Day Master, a pull toward obligations, money matters and the needs of others. The Goat rubs against your Dog branches. 2027 is also the closing year of your 10-year cycle that began in 2018, before a new one opens in 2028. Years like this often invite reflection on what you are ready to put down.

Months more in tune for both of you, by shared harmony:

- December 75 and November 72, when Water energy arrives. This is the element you both need, so these months suit plans, honest conversations and starting things together.
- March 68 and February 65, also carrying Water, a fresh stretch for ideas and shared projects.
- September 62 and August 60, when Metal steadies things.

Months that suit rest and gentleness:

- July 45, the year's own Fire Goat doubled. Lighter schedules, cool spaces and patience with each other's moods might help.
- June 50 and April 51. April is a Dragon month that echoes Emma's Day Branch and clashes with Liam's Dog branches. Your everyday-life theme may feel louder then, so soft words go a long way.
- May 53, warm and busy.

October, at 57, is a Dog month that mirrors April from the other side. It touches Emma's Dragon and doubles Liam's Dog. Neither month is something to fear. They are simply good moments to notice your home rhythm and be kind about it.

You might use the summer months for rest, and save shared decisions or trips you are excited about for late in the year, when the elements lean toward what both your charts are asking for.

The Saju reasoning

The Fire Goat year brings Fire and Earth, the heavier elements for both of you, so each person's year harmony is 42. The shared months rise when Water arrives in November, December, February and March, and dip when Fire and Earth peak in July and June.

Ways to care for your bond

One. Find water together

Since Water is the medicine for both of you, make it a shared ritual. A weekly walk by a river, a lake or the sea, an evening swim, or even a rainy-day stroll without a destination can help. Liam, Water is your element itself. Emma, it cools the heat in your chart. Being near it side by side is one of the simplest ways to feel more in tune.

Two. Keep a cool, uncluttered corner

Your charts both carry a lot of Earth, which can feel like heaviness and stuck clutter. Choose one space at home and keep it clear and calm, in white, silver, soft gray or deep blue, the colors of Metal and Water. It can be a reading chair, a tidy desk or a bare windowsill. Let it be the place either of you goes to breathe.

Three. Lean into evenings and winter

Water belongs to night and winter, and Metal to autumn. You might keep your deepest conversations for late evenings rather than rushed mornings. You could also treat late autumn and winter as your shared season for planning, reflecting and starting projects. In 2027 that is exactly when your shared harmony rises.

Four. Learn something side by side

Metal is the Helpful element for both of you. In Saju it is tied to study, skills and qualifications, and Liam's Day Pillar names expertise as a key. Emma's Day Pillar suggests steady output. Pick a course, a language or a craft you can practice together, and share what you make. Learning in parallel lets Emma's Metal feed Liam naturally, without either of you playing teacher.

Five. A weekly ten minutes of words

Water is also expression. Once a week, set aside ten minutes to tell each other three things: something you appreciated, something that weighed on you, and something you are looking forward to. This gives Liam a gentle habit of saying things out loud. It gives Emma's expressive side a place to land. And it gives your Dragon and Dog home life a regular moment of clearing the air.

Summary

- Emma's Day Pillar: Geng Chen (庚辰), the Full Moon Meeting the Dragon, clear-minded, loyal, ambitious and warmer than she first appears
- Liam's Day Pillar: Ren Xu (壬戌), Great Water Held by a Dam, responsible and patient, gathering strength under pressure
- Overall harmony: 59, Learning each other
- Strongest link: Metal feeding Water, with Emma's clarity nourishing Liam's depth, and a spark of 68
- Main difference: the Dragon and Dog clash in home life (everyday life 46), plus a gap in pace between a strong chart and a gentle one
- What Emma gives Liam: Metal and Water, about 24% of what his chart needs, felt as structure, support and belief
- What Liam gives Emma: Water, about 11% of what her chart needs, felt as calm, cooling and room for self-expression
- Months more in tune together in 2027: December, November, March and February, with July, June and April suiting rest and gentleness

This reading describes the energies you two bring to each other, the currents, the friction and the shared medicine. It does not describe where your story goes. That part belongs only to you, Emma and Liam. Take what feels true, leave what does not, and let it start conversations rather than settle them. You are the ones who decide what your bond becomes.
